"Probable cause" means reasonably reliable information to suspect there is a "fair probability" that a person has committed a crime, or that a search will reveal contraband or evidence. "Reasonable suspicion" is a strong suspicion, even if based on less information of a less-reliable nature, that a person is involved in criminal activity or may be armed and dangerous. (Example: Terry vs Ohio)

DOJ regulation from 1978 that prohibits law enforcement from sharing “intelligence” about individuals unless the information is supported by reasonable suspicion of criminal activity. The 1978 regulation (FISA) was adopted in the wake of prior domestic surveillance abuses. FISA prohibits surveillance of or production of business records regarding a U.S. person based solely on First Amendment activities (Example: photography)
